

Abstract

The invention relates to programming subsidized radio telephones with NAM data. The invention provides a subsidy code to allow a user to program the NAM. This code changes once programming is complete in response to an incoming call.